

Lesson 6 FAQs

Q: Is it possible to create a window and specify its component locations and sizes without using a layout manager?

A: Java's layout managers are designed to simplify the process of laying out windows without regard for the platform the program is running on. Placing multiple components into a window without using a layout manager is possible—layout managers make it much easier to control the appearance of components at different screen sizes.